

Allstate in Florida

For 75 years, Allstate's mission has been providing our customers with the security and peace of mind they deserve.

Although that mission has been put to the test in Florida during the last two hurricane seasons, our commitment remains – we are safeguarding and strengthening our communities.

More than one million Floridians look to Allstate for their insurance needs. With that in mind, we recognize our responsibility to play an integral role in the cities and towns in which we do business. In 2005, our Foundation grants, corporate investments, supplier contracts, jobs and taxes paid helped build stronger communities and fuel local economies.

As an extension of the “Good Hands® Promise,” our agents and employees have demonstrated a caring and compassionate spirit through volunteerism and community involvement. Last year alone, we awarded 147 Agency Hands in the Community Grants to nonprofit organizations making a difference in the lives of people across our state. Through our Helping Hands program, our people have tirelessly given of themselves to help their neighbors in need.

The hurricanes of 2004 and 2005 taught valuable lessons about the importance of caring for people in the communities we call home. We all have a responsibility to maintain this commitment. Allstate will continue to do just that.
